Friday

“We are too awake!”

We were up and ready to go this morning at 8:30 for some shopping in New York City – at least the hard-core shoppers were ready and full of energy! We have finally arrived at our final day of the trip. So much has happened, and we are so thankful for the many things we have seen and learned in the last week.

There isn't a lot to relay about our day today, but we can at least share some of the highlights of the students we ran into while walking around the city. Some toured St. Patrick's Cathedral, which was a beautiful site. Many students also took time to go to FAO Schwartz – one of the largest toy stores in the U.S.

Shopping

Another highlight for many was walking around Central Park – the largest park in the country. It even has its own zoo and skating rink! Some got a special carriage ride, which gave a small tour of the park. Mr. Wit, Mr. Wiers, and Mrs. Leonard enjoyed a nice lunch watching the ice skaters at Rockefeller Center.

We could have easily spent an entire day walking around the city, but unfortunately we had to fly back very early in the afternoon. It was a wonderful trip, and we saw many things that we will never forget, but we were also ready to go back home after a very tiring week.

A video game or two?

Catching up on the BB scores!

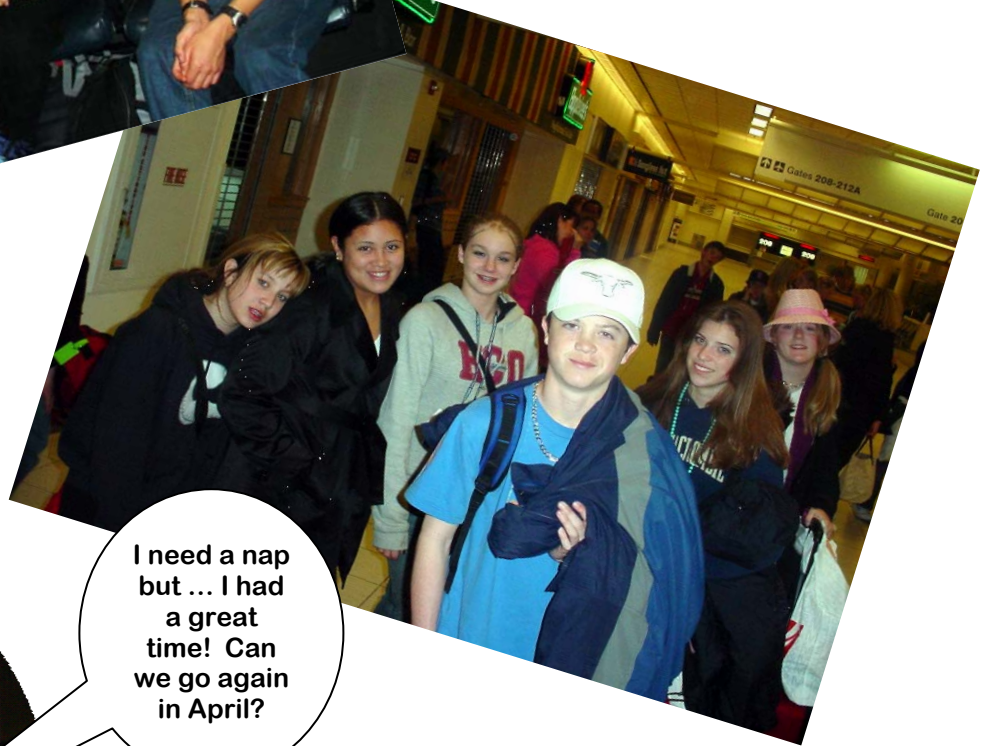

Senator Nydam, "... It's not Valentine's Day."

We hope you have felt a part of us as we have taken you through our experiences this week. It has been too amazing to fully describe, but we hope you have gotten a taste of how much this walk through history has impacted each of us.

We Are Heading Home

I need a nap but ... I had a great time! Can we go again
in April?

With Lots of Memories
